those days this was a considerable force.

Today the Packard Motor Car Company employs nearly 14,000 men. The plant comprises about 100 acres of floor space. The annual production in motor cars, regarded as the best in the world, and motor trucks, which are in military and civilian service in every part of the world, reaches a value of many hundreds of millions of dollars. With the participation of the United States in the world war, the Packard Company offered itself to the government and was one of the few concerns entrusted with the production of Liberty airplane motors.

Fifteen years ago, when Grace Hospital, Detroit, was a great deal smaller and of a great deal less importance in the welfare of the city than it is now, Mr. Newberry succeeded the late D. M. Perry, sr. (father of Mrs. Avery Connelley, now of this city), as president. Under his direction the hospital has doubled in size and far more than doubled in capacity for efficient, modern treatment.

Through his connection with the Cleveland-Cliffs Iron Company, Mr. Newberry has had a great part in the marvelous development of Michigan's iron-producing territory. This great concern operates many iron mines and furnaces in the upper peninsula, and transports its products to the steel-making centers of the United States in a great fleet of its own steamers. In people did not know how much they owed to this man, who, though possessed of wealth, still had the interest of the mass of the people at heart.

Throughout the State of Michigan there are today many monuments to the humanitarian and public-spirited principles of Truman H. Newberry and his family. Two of the finest buildings at the University of Michigan bear the name of "Newberry." One is the Newberry Memorial Building, built by the mother of Truman Newberry in memory of her husband to house the Students' Christian Association. Another is the Helen Newberry Memorial Home for Young Women. This building was erected by Truman H. and John S. Newberry and their sister, Mrs. Henry B. Joy, as a memorial to their mother.

One of the landmarks of Detroit is another of the Newberry monuments. This is the Newberry Memorial Chapel, at the corner of Rivington and Larned streets. When it was erected this was considered one of the best residential districts in the city. Today, it is near the heart of Detroit's ghetto.

Up State, too, the name of Newberry is by no means unknown. In the upper peninsula town named for the father of Truman H. Newberry, there is a spick and span little church with extraordinarily beautiful chimes and a splendid pipe organ, which were made possible by the generosity of Truman Newberry.

Truman H. Newberry married Harriet Barnes, one of the leaders of society in Brooklyn, N. Y. They

Miss Mary Littell, daughter of Brig. Gen. and Mrs. I. W. Littell and sister of Miss Ruth Lincoln Littell, whose marriage to Lieut. Commander William Cook Owens, U. S. N., will take place on June 25.

In addition it has made a wonderfully beautiful park of Grand Island, in Lake Superior, and has devoted the tremendous amount of money and energy to the development of Michigan's forestry possibilities. The company has also established a large number of experimental farms, designed solely to help the people of Northern Michigan determine what their land will produce most profitably.

In 1906, Mr. Newberry and a number of his associates organized the Michigan Naval Militia Brigade, the first step ever taken in this State toward the establishment of a Marine National Guard. Two years later, on the outbreak of the Spanish-American War, the entire organization enlisted in the United States regular army and served with distinction during the war. Mr. Newberry, throughout the unpleasantness, served as lieutenant on board the U. S. S. Yosemite.

It was while on a training trip with the brigade that Mr. Newberry attracted the attention of Theodore Roosevelt, then secretary of the Navy. When the latter became president, he named Mr. Newberry assistant secretary of the navy, in 1906, and three years later the Detroit man became a cabinet member, as Secretary of the Navy. At the expiration of President Roosevelt's term, Mr. Newberry spent more than a year traveling abroad, and on his journey paid special attention to the naval equipment and commercial activities of various foreign countries.

On his return, Mr. Newberry again demonstrated his interest in the navy by his devotion to public welfare. At that time, with business generally throughout the country "going to pot," Detroit bankers found themselves confronted with very serious conditions. Every financial man in the city remembers well the meetings of anxious bank directors that were held almost daily and how the situation went from bad to worse until it almost verged on panic. They all recall how at one of these meetings, it was proposed that Detroit banks should call all loans. This procedure, with its attendant hardships on the mass of the people, would have gone through but for Mr. Newberry. During an intense moment of the discussion, he rose and made a speech which is notable not only for its brevity but for its courage, in financial circles.

"The business of a bank in time of stress is to protect its customers, and not itself," he declared. "No Detroit bank should call any loan at this time. I protest against it and will never agree to it."

He carried the day, and for a long time Detroit and Michigan have three children—a daughter, Carol, now the wife of Francis Brooks, Jr., a captain of artillery, who is somewhere in France; twin sons, Phelps and Barnes, aged 24, have been in the service of their country since the United States entered the war. There are four grandchildren, two small Brooks boys, a baby daughter of Lieut. and Mrs. Barnes Newberry, and an infant son of Maj. and Mrs. Phelps Newberry.

When, in April, 1917, President Wilson declared a state of war existing between the United States and Germany, the former Secretary of the Navy immediately offered his services to his country. He asked for service abroad, desiring to get as near the scene of activity as possible. But this was denied him. After two months' effort to break in, Mr. Newberry was accepted for naval service. His previous experience and great business and executive ability were recognized to the extent that Secretary Daniels gave him the rank of lieutenant commander, the highest rank ever conferred by the United States Navy Department on a civilian.

For a month Com. Newberry's work kept him in Boston, the headquarters of the fourth naval district. In July he was transferred to New York and appointed aide and assistant to Rear Admiral N. R. Usher, commandant of the third naval district. In this capacity Com. Newberry was designated personnel officer, with active direction of more than 4,000 men. Included in the third district were the ports of New York and Brooklyn, the Brooklyn navy yard and every naval activity and coast defense from New London, Conn., to Barnegat, N. J. His appointment to this position is highly significant from the fact that the vast majority of the United States armed forces now fighting in France have begun their journey overseas from the third naval district. All activities of transportation of troops, supplies, munitions, food and equipment is carried on through this district.

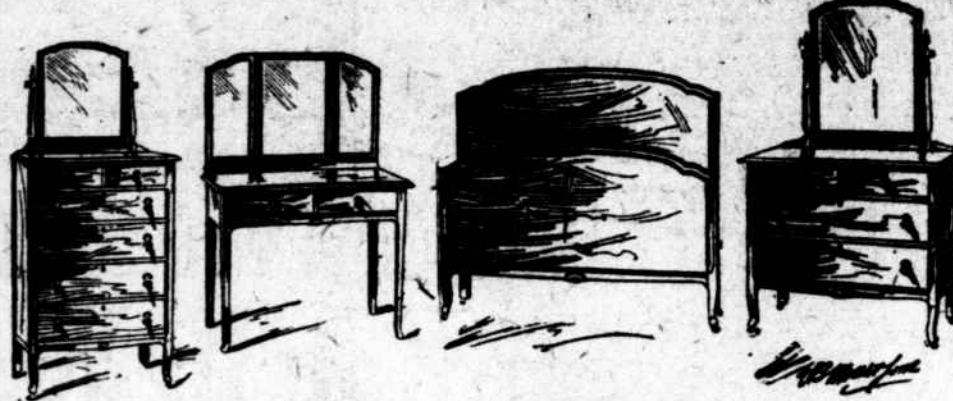

In the nineteenth months Com. Newberry has been on duty at naval headquarters, 290 Broadway, New York City, he has been at his home in Detroit just one day. He works eight to twelve hours every weekday and has never missed a forenoon's work at his office on Sundays and holidays.

Perhaps the best illustration of Commander Newberry's interest in and sympathy for the general personnel of the navy can be found in a trip to his New York office. There one would see the ante-room outside literally jammed with men of all ranks in the navy. The gold lace of junior commissioned officers and the floppy wide trousers of the ordinary "goby" rub together as they await the word that will let them inside the railing of the information desk. They are all there for the one purpose, to get in "to see Commander Newberry for just a minute" to thank him for some favor he has done them in the past, or to crave his assistance in their work of preparation for efficient service in our naval fighting force.

And none of them are ever disappointed. Commander Newberry never refuses to see anyone. It may take time, when the crowd is thick, but eventually every one of them will get in to confront the blue-clad figure of whom so much of their welfare depends, and eventually
